

Separation Agreements

The beginning of a divorce can be a difficult time to navigate. The stressful nature of the situation may only continue until a final divorce agreement is achieved. While many separated couples can come to terms with one another regarding the logistics of their finances and daily lives, some, unfortunately, cannot do so as easily. In order to ease the complexity of the divorce process, a separation agreement can be established between you and your spouse.

A separation agreement is a formal written agreement between you and your spouse which outlines support and financial conditions until the divorce becomes final.

Topics often addressed within a separation agreement include:

Child support

Custody and parenting time

Spousal Support

Financial responsibility for joint bills

Disposition of the marital home

Tax refunds and deductions

Division of assets, including retirement accounts
