

Military Divorce

Divorce for military families is very different than divorce for civilian families. Issues concerning court jurisdiction, division of property, military retirement and disability pay, child support, and child custody can be extremely complex where one or both spouses have served in the military at some point during the marriage. Even seasoned family and matrimonial law attorneys can find themselves uncertain and unable to effectively represent service members and non-military spouses in divorce proceedings. How We Can Help

Tully Rinckey PLLC is a service-disabled, veteran-owned small business. Our roots are in the military – and military families. We understand the unique circumstances military families face in divorce proceedings and can represent service members and non-military spouses throughout New York, Washington, D.C., and Virginia. If you are located elsewhere, we can advise your attorney on military divorce, child support, retirement, and veterans' compensation issues. If you are a service member or military spouse – or an attorney representing such individuals – call Tully Rinckey PLLC in Rochester, N.Y. to schedule a consultation with an experienced military divorce lawyer. We can help you in any of the following: Military Divorce

Military Separation

Division of Military Retirement and Disability Pay

Child Custody and Child Support
