

ROTC and Military Academy Disenrollment

Whether it is done voluntarily or involuntarily, disenrollment from a Senior Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) program or a military academy is a serious matter for cadets and midshipmen. For service academy cadets, involuntary disenrollment almost means having to pay back anywhere from $15,000 to well over $100,000 in tuition and/or grants. For ROTC scholarship and prior service cadets, disenrollment results in a debt that must be reimbursed to federal government for all scholarships or, in some cases, serving active duty at an enlisted rank for the amount of years scholarship monies were paid to the cadet. Tully Rinckey PLLC is a service-disabled, veteran-owned small business. Our founding partner and managing partner both began their military careers at Hofstra University's ROTC program. We can help.

How We Can Help

Allegations of poor academic performance, misconduct, and failure to maintain proper fitness standards are some of the reasons that prompt the command to initiate disenrollment proceedings against a cadet or midshipman. However, many ROTC units do not properly conduct disenrollment proceedings, and our military law attorneys are experienced in identifying procedural and due process errors. We can also attend and/or prepare cadets and midshipmen for disenrollment board hearings, where they can present persuasive mitigating circumstances and/or rebuttal evidence. While each case is different with varying unique circumstances, our military law attorneys have achieved favorable results in many disenrollment cases. Call Tully Rinckey PLLC in Rochester, N.Y. if you no longer want to be enrolled in a ROTC program/service academy, or if you are facing involuntary disenrollment. We have been successful in getting cadets and midshipmen commissioned or disenrolled per their wishes. Schedule your consultation with an experienced military law attorney today.
