

Breach of Warranty

When purchasing any product, buyers have certain expectations about how good it is or how it should perform. These expectations arise from guarantees or promises that are either explicitly stated by or implied under the purchase's warranty. All U.S. consumer purchases carry a warranty, which is a type of contract that must adhere to the standards set by the Uniform Commercial Code. How We Can Help

The warranty lawyers at Tully Rinckey PLLC in Syracuse, N.Y. can help consumers and businesses who have purchased defective or inadequate goods. Whether the faulty goods purchased were automobiles, computers, appliances, heavy equipment, or cattle, we can help you get your money back, receive repairs or replacements or recover damages. Call our warranty dispute attorneys in Syracuse, N.Y. today if you have encountered any of the following types of warranty breaches:

Patent defect:
problem with the good was obvious when it was purchased.

Latent defect:

problem with the good was discovered after the purchase.

Breach of warranty of merchantability:

the good purchased is not what it is supposed to be.

Breach of warranty of fitness for a particular purpose:

the good purchased does not do what it is said to do.
