

Insurance Litigation

There are generally two types of insurance that most people have: liability insurance and casualty insurance. Liability insurance covers the policyholder for injuries to other people or damages to someone else's property, as in the case with automobile insurance, worker's compensation insurance, and malpractice insurance. Casualty insurance covers policyholders for injuries they sustain or damage to their property. Automobile insurance often has a casualty insurance component, as does disability insurance, life insurance, crop insurance, title insurance, and fire insurance. How We Can Help

Tully Rinckey PLLC's insurance litigation attorneys are able to represent insurance carriers and policy holders in a broad range of coverage disputes involving casualty and liability insurance.
